2011 Patriot Day Parade This is one of the events I took some pictures of at the annual "Patriot Day" parade in Saratoga Springs, NY. The parade route goes through downtown and up Broadway through the heart of the village. It's a mile long and goes up and down Broadway as well as through all the streets of downtown. They also have a professional marching band that plays and it's a fun little parade. It was a beautiful day and the scene was very festive and lively. I like the mix of military from the New York National Guard and Connecticut National Guard as well as patriotic public service vehicles and organizations. Here's a photo of a traditional antique fire engine on parade, here's a sweet big tractor pulling a car, here's a parade float with a flag and a "Proud to Be an American" on it, and here's a man dressed up like the Uncle Sam, complete with black cape and top hat. About Me I'm a commercial photographer based in New York City specializing in stock photo assignments and corporate editorial. A new model for simulating head injury in infant rats has been developed and tested in infant rats. Both soft tissue and cerebral vasculature injury occurred. The injury could be simulated by a closed head injury with a weight drop from a fixed height onto a table. Each head injury produced a characteristic form of tissue damage that was consistent from animal to animal. The major advantage of this model is its ability to simulate both cerebral and soft tissue injury, thus allowing the evaluation of treatment modalities that affect cerebral and/or soft tissue injury. Cabotia Cabotia is a monotypic genus of flowering plants in the family Araceae, consisting of a single species, Cabotia paludosa. It is a tropical perennial herb.

The species is native to Mexico and Central America. It is commonly known as dewdrop arum, stinging elephant's ear, elephant's ears, and fernleaf orchid. Description It is
