The custom tag can be created in the config file itself or as a child node of the web.config node (See illustration). The custom tag should be able to return multiple values, and it is set as a child of the node. Current situation config file (config2.config): string another string config file (config1.config): string another string Output config1.config: string another string What I want to achieve config1.config: string another string value3 The tag3 in the sample xml is what I am trying to get. As far as I can see the config1.config and the config2.config files are similar. I am using the Json.net package, so I will be able to parse and serialize the xml in a similar way.
