I have an SQL query like this: select... from... order by myField However, myField is a numeric column, and so in MySQL, I get "1", "2", etc. I want to display, as the results, "2", "1", etc. How can I do this? A: There is no straightforward solution. My approach would be to cast the column to a string, and sort the string: select... from... order by cast(myField as char) asc, myField In C-style languages, the "larger" number is naturally stored last, because they evaluate to true first. The optimizer can determine this without the sort order. A: Use this trick: select... from... order by cast(myField as char), myField Basically, MySQL will reorder the data as you ask. The trick is that the cast tells it to reorder the data from largest to smallest. Home Depot, LinkedIn donate to support our troops, communities Home Depot and LinkedIn donated $50,000 to the Fisher House Foundation's MISSION For Our Troops program, which helps military families stay in the comfort of home by providing housing, food and other necessities. "At Home Depot, our commitment to supporting our military families is unwavering," said Jill Brennan, vice president of community relations and corporate giving for the Fisher House. "We are honored to make a small but meaningful donation to help the Fisher House Foundation continue to offer families the stability, comfort and support they deserve during their time of need." Home Depot and Fisher House have a longstanding partnership through the company's MISSION For Our Troops program. Over the past two decades, more than half of all the MISSION For Our Troops chapters have been created in communities across the United States.
